NOVEL CORONAVIRUS (COVID-19) AND HOW WE GATHER FOR WORSHIP

Wash your hands - please ensure you are following proper hand washing and hand sanitising techniques.

Stay away if you are feeling unwell - Health Department has advised the church to reduce the risk of spreading contagions. If you are feeling ill, even mildly so, please do not attend worship or church events.

No Intinction - A combination of current literature and expert medical advice concludes that sipping from the common cup and sharing a handshake represent minimal risk of transmission of contagion and fall within the parameters of the normal risks of daily living. On the other hand, the practice of intinction is a higher risk activity; fingertips coming in contact with the bread which is then dipped in the wine or fingertips coming in direct contact with the wine or with the inside of the chalice may contaminate the shared wine with pathogens other than those found in saliva. The choice for a communicant, then, is to share the common cup; or to receive in only one kind, that is only the bread.

The Peace and greetings - Personal touching will always be a matter of individual choice. As a precaution it is probably wise to refrain from shaking hands during the Passing of the Peace. However, people's own needs should be respected, and nodding or bowing are quite acceptable ways of sharing the Peace, if so desired.

Dipping worse than sipping at Eucharist

The report by Canadian cardiologist David Gould says church goers are more likely to get sick from airborne infections than from sharing a communion chalice, and the massive amounts of bacteria needed to cause an infection are usually not found on a common communion cup. Gould did warn, however, that trying to skirt the problem by dipping bread into the cup rather than sipping from it may actually cause more problems because hands contain more germs than a person's mouth. Despite the fears of catching a cold, the flu or worse from a common cup, Gould said most such fears are simply unfounded. If communion cups were a danger, Gould said, there would be cases of mass infections.
